LOGLINE

An aggrieved chemist stricken with buyer's remorse over a WMD she created is an unwilling pawn in a mind-bending manipulation run by a ruthless arms dealer, who exploits her guilt and failing memory to steal the weapon's deadly formula.

SYNOPSIS

An FBI agent with amnesia finds herself in a windowless safehouse assigned to interrogate surviving members of a terrorist group that will release a deadly nerve agent in New York City in two hours.

During the interrogation of the group's chemist, Susan Horvath—who sold her deadly secret to the terrorists as vengeance against the government's role in her husband's death—the FBI agent realizes that she is actually Susan, and the woman sitting across from her is an imposter.

Shocked to her core without means to escape, Susan goes head to head with Abigor, a ruthless arms dealer, who arranged the elaborate ruse on an isolated oil rig.

But when Abigor compels her to create a new supply of the nerve agent, Susan sacrifices herself by destroying the nerve agent in a final act of redemption.
